To Whom It May Concern:

I'm writing in response to your ad under Publishing in last Sunday's Philadelphia Inquirer. I am a former associate editor of the Philadelphia alternative weekly, the Welcomat (not known as Philadelphia Weekly). I served at the Welcomat in several capacities from weekly pop music columnist, to copy editor and typesetter, production manager and music editor to my last position.

All of the Welcomat's writers (with the exception of a small editorial staff) were free-lancers who wrote on an extensive variety of topics. Stories were never assigned, so writers were free to write on what they wanted and in just about any manner or style they chose.

Reading those various stories while I either typed or scanned them in and then prepared them for the editor-in-chief was one of the happiest and most enjoyable times of my professional life. I loved doing it.

I would be very happy to discuss this with you further. A resume is attached.

Sincerely,

Peter Brown
